Faculty mentors: Jamil Zaki

Research supervisor(s):
Luiza Santos, PhD Student, lsantos1@stanford.edu

Project topic(s): Moral psychology, political psychology

Brief description of scientific issues:
What factors inform our intuitions about human morality? How can some policy preferences become reflections of our core beliefs about right and wrong? What are the psychological processes underlying political polarization?

If you are interested in these questions and want to learn more about topics related to inter-group conflict and moral psychology, we encourage you to apply to this summer research position. The Stanford Social Neuroscience lab has a number of ongoing projects investigating these timely issues and we are looking for a motivated assistant to help with survey development, data collection, and more.

Skills required:
No requirements, but introductory coursework in psychology and familiarity with R are preferred.

Skills to be learned:
Survey development, study deployment, online data collection, literature review, and more.

Full or Part time

Contact person: Luiza Santos, lsantos1@stanford.edu